

WILL SEX SELL?

Four years after the final airing of “Sex and the City,” the Golden Globe and Emmy-winning hit HBO show continues to be missed. While some industry insiders weighed in that the starring women—Sarah Jessica Parker, Kim Cattrall, Kristin Davis and Cynthia Nixon—waited a little too long to get back together for the big screen version, it seems to no longer matter—the fans are waiting. And Sex and the City: The Movie actually comes at a great time, offsetting the mass-produced, testosterone-filled action releases of the season.

WORDS PAUL SALFEN

Sex and the City: The Movie Darren Star Productions

Releases: May 30

Director: Michael Patrick King

Synopsis: Carrie Bradshaw and her stiletto-clad posse are at it again, living la vida el sexo. But this time, viewers seek final answers to long-awaited questions—will Big and Carrie finally tie the knot? Does Charlotte’s Asian baby girl make her way to the US? Do Samantha and Miranda [played by newly-outed Cynthia Nixon] share a lusty lesbian love scene?

Cast: SJP and her girls, the men who love them, including Chris Noth, NYC Mayor Michael Bloomberg, Jennifer Hudson—finally, a non-white chick!—and a handful of series regulars

Spoiler Alert: Reported scenes of Carrie in a wedding gown, Samantha surfing on the West Coast, Charlotte preppers and—most recently—fire crotch Cynthia Nixon revealed a Sex and the City death. Damn her.

ENVY Prediction: Financially, it’s set to be wildly successful, but like every tv-to-silver screen flick, it’s likely to be one big disappointment. We’re secretly excited, though. —FA

Like the television series, star Sarah Jessica Parker once again serves as producer. “Producing responsibilities change your schedule. It’s your burden on the set, but I love the burden of producing,” she says. “It’s also nice to be a hired actor and have no responsibilities.”

Shooting in a city that often seems apathetic or desensitized to what’s going on seemed to be out the window with this one. There were plenty of people that wanted to see as much as they could and as early as possible of Carrie Bradshaw and the girls. “I think in New York, the crowds gathered a lot more quickly. It was never disruptive, though,” she says. “People were excited.”

So what can she say about the movie without giving out spoilers? “It’s coming out May 30,” she jokes, adding that the date holds some significance to die-hard fans. “It’s Memorial Day weekend, which is the standard date the show used to premiere on.”

While “sexaholics” wait for the film’s debut, fans are already questioning the possibilities of a sequel.

Parker admits it’s not out of the question. “I don’t know if that’s for us to say,” she says. “I think we’ll have to wait and see what we’re able to put together and how people respond.”
